Harry Potter author J.K. Rowling has announced that she has created a website called Pottermore.com. The new site will be officially online from October 2011. The official online announcement says: "Pottermore is a free website for those who would like to get an exciting online experience around the reading of the Harry Potter books." The site will include a lot of unpublished material about Harry Potter, that Ms Rowling couldn't include in her books because of the word limit. The author says there will be a lot of new information about the characters and their magic adventures.

J.K. Rowling says she is starting Pottermore to thank her fans. "I want to give something back to the fans and to bring the stories to a new digital generation," she says. Today there is no official Harry Potter website, although there are extremely popular sites run by fans, such as mugglenet.com and the-leaky-cauldron.org, as well as the Warner Brothers movie site. Pottermore will allow fans to communicate with Rowling and create new content together. She says: "I hope fans and those new to Harry will have as much fun helping to shape Pottermore as I have." She adds that fans, "will be able to enjoy a safe, unique online reading experience built around the books".
